

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

THE BANNATYNE MANUSCRIPT.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE.

BY THE EDITOR.

IN the Memoir of George Bannatyne by Sir Walter Scott, the Extracts from the Memorall Buik by Dr. David Laing, and the other literary and bibliographical matter bearing on the contents of the Bannatyne Manuscript, which have now been grouped in the first volume of the Hunterian Club edition, there will be found all that is really known as to this famous collection of Scottish Poetry, and of its compiler, George Bannatyne.

There will thus be no occasion to traverse the same ground in the present note, but it will not be out of place to give a short account of the genesis and completion of the Club scheme for printing for its members a full and exact rendering of the eleven hundred bulky folios of the Manuscript, "written in the tyme of pest"—1568—by George Bannatyne.

Shortly after the work of the Hunterian Club was begun it was decided that a complete copy of the Bannatyne Manuscript should if possible be obtained, and permission for this purpose having been courteously granted by the authorities of the Advocates' Library in Edinburgh, where the Manuscript is deposited, arrangements for carrying it out were made.

The services of Mr. Aimers, a competent copyist of old writings, were retained, and the Rev. George A. Panton, a member of Council of the Club, and who about this time had gone to reside in Edinburgh, undertook the editorial work. Unfortunately, after only the first two sheets had been printed, Mr. Panton was seized with serious illness, from which he never recovered, and the Club was thus early deprived of his accomplished and genial co-operation in its projected work.

For some time after this the printing was suspended, until it was resumed under the charge of the writer of this note as editor, and it has now been carried on to a termination, though not without many serious difficulties and interruptions.

INTRODUCTORY NOTE.

It was soon found, for instance, that the constant references required to be made to the original Manuscript in Edinburgh for comparison of proofs and checking of copy, &c., imposed a serious tax upon the editor's time, till a way out of the difficulty was arranged through the great liberality of the Advocates' Library authorities, who allowed it to be transferred to the Town-Clerk's office in Glasgow, where, with ample provision for safe custody against loss or damage, it could at all times be accessible for editorial purposes.

During the whole time that this part of the work was in progress the editor had the advantage of being able to consult the Depute Town-Clerk, Mr. Robert Renwick, in whose room the Manuscript was always placed for examination, upon any obscure passages and doubtful readings which cropped up from day to day.

When the text had been thus quite disposed of there remained the considerable illustrative matter to be dealt with, and this was followed by the extensive glossary which involved much special work. In this latter the editor received valuable assistance from the late Mr. David Donaldson, the well-known and esteemed editor of the latest edition of Jamieson's Scottish Dictionary, whose recent death has been a distinct loss to Scottish letters.

It was thought that some facsimiles of parts of the Manuscript containing points of interest might be given, and those selected will be found to have been chosen on this principle.

The long delay which has occurred in the completion of the Hunterian Club edition of the Bannatyne Manuscript must have severely tried the patience of the remaining members, as it has done that of the editor. For any share of it which he may be responsible for, he has to beg their consideration on account of the very serious burden of work and worry which has in connection with it so long rested on his shoulders, and which he is now thankful to say is finally disposed of.

THE present Part contains a short Memoir of GEORGE BANNATYNE by Sir WALTER SCOTT, and other introductory matter. From various accidental circumstances, and from the fact that the work has proved very much heavier than was anticipated, the Glossary, which was intended to be issued at an earlier date, is not yet finished. It will therefore form a separate and concluding Part, which will also contain a number of facsimiles of pages of the Bannatyne Manuscript, and Title Pages for the volumes.

GEORGE BANNATYNE.

BY SIR WALTER SCOTT, BART.

THE pious care with which some of our associates have searched out every particular which Time has spared respecting the honoured Patron under whose name our Institution is formed, has been materially aided by the discovery of George Bannatyne's "Memoriall Buik," in the possession of his descendant, Sir James Foulis of Woodhall, Baronet, who has obligingly lent it for that purpose. The result of the enquiry does not indeed throw much light on his personal character, or the incidents of his life, but yet conveys to the Members of the Bannatyne Club¹ some information which cannot but be acceptable. It is interesting to learn, that the indefatigable preserver of Scottish literature was by birth, education, and fortune, above the middling class of society; and still of greater consequence to know, that in an age of inveterate feuds and bloody violence, the outrages of the time did not reach the lover of the Muses, by whose unwearied exertions so much of the ancient Scottish poetry has been preserved from oblivion.

The father of our Patron was James Bannatyne of the Kirktown of Newtyld, near the village of Meigle, in Angus-shire. He was a burgher and writer in Edinburgh, and was probably the person alluded to by Robert Semple,—

For men of law, I wait not quhair to luke:
James Bannatyne was anis a man of skill.¹

Of the descent of this James, we know nothing with certainty; but it has been ascertained by our venerable associate Sir William MacLeod Bannatyne, chief of the name, that he was connected with the ancient family of the Bennauchtyne, more recently spelled Bannatyne, of Camys, in the Isle of Bute.² The name was sometimes spelled Ballenden and Ballantyne.

James Bannatyne of New Tyld had a numerous family by his wife, Katherine Tailliefer. She is recorded by her son to have been "a woman of godly conversation, with whom her husband led a godly, christian, and pleasant life." Their children were twenty-three in number. Had each, or any considerable number of this large family been gifted with a moderate share of the taste and perseverance of our Patron George, the literature of Scotland would have been in a state of preservation which might have been the envy of Europe. But the taste and patience which selected and executed the Bannatyne Manuscripts could only be indulged to one individual. The number of persons of condition whose names occur as god-fathers and god-mothers to the numerous family of our Patron's father, attest the respectability of the parents. We may distinguish the respectable names of Mr. James MacGill, Clerk Register, Fowlis of Collington, with a branch of which family George Bannatyne was afterwards connected, the relict of Henderson of Fordel, the spouse of Sir Niel Layng, Symon Preston, and other names belonging to the landed gentry. It is perhaps scarce worth while to notice, that Patrick Hepburne of Wauchton, a confidant of the too well known Earl of Bothwell,¹ was in the bonds of spiritual kindred with the family of our George Bannatyne, being god-father to his brother Patrick.

George Bannatyne himself, the seventh child of his parents, was born on the 22nd day of February, 1545 years. His god-fathers were George Tailliefer, his maternal uncle, and William Fifcheare, his cousin; his god-mother Mawife Fifcheare. He was bred up to trade, but does not appear to have been engaged in business in his own behalf early in life. Reverting to the death of his mother at the age of fifty-seven years, he adds, that she left alive behind her eleven children, of whom eight were still under the paternal roof, and did not possess any independent means of livelihood.

To this seclusion from active life during his youth we owe the possession of that rich collection of Scottish Poetry which forms our Patron's title to our respect. We will ſpeak of it more at large hereafter; in the meantime it is ſufficient to ſay that it was compiled and tranſcribed in the year 1568, and muſt have been a labour of love to the collector, ſince he purſued it with an earneſt zeal which ſeems almoſt miraculous. The volume, written in a very cloſe hand, and containing near eight hundred pages, appears to have occupied the tranſcriber only three months, an aſſertion which we ſhould have ſcrupled to receive upon any other authority than his own.

In 1572, George Bannatyne was provided in a tenement in the town of Leith by a gift from his father. He was then twenty-seven years, and probably about to enter on buſineſs on his own account. But it was not until the 27th October, 1587, that, being then in his thirty-third year, he was admitted in due and competent form to the privileges of a merchant and guild-brother in the city of Edinburgh.

We have no means of knowing what branch of traffic George Bannatyne chiefly exerciſed; it is probable that, as uſual in a Scottiſh burgh, his commerce was general and miſcellaneous. We have reaſon to know that it was ſucceſsful, as we find him in a few years poſſeſſed of a conſiderable capital, the time being conſidered, which he employed to advantage in various money-lending tranſactions. It muſt not be forgot that the penal laws of the Catholic period pronounced all direct taking of intereſt upon money, to be uſurious and illegal. Theſe denunciations did not decreaſe the deſire of the wealthy to derive ſome profit from their capital, or diminifh the neceſſity of the embarrassed landholder who wiſhed to borrow money. The mutual intereſt of the parties ſuggeſted various evaſions of the law, of which the most common was, that the capitalist advanced to his debtor the sum wanted, as the price of a corresponding annuity, payable out of the lands and tenements of the debtor, which annuity was declared redeemable upon the said debtor repaying the sum advanced. The moneyed men of those days, therefore, imitated the conduct imputed to the Jewish patriarch by Shylock. They did not take —— interest—not as you would say

Directly interest,

but they retained payment of an annuity as long as the debtor retained the use of their capital, which came much to the same thing. A species of transaction introduced for the purpose of evading the laws against usury was continued, as affording a convenient mode of securing the lender's money.

Our researches have discovered that Mr. George Bannatyne had sufficient funds to enter into various transactions of this kind, in the capacity of lender; and as we have no reason to suppose that he profited unfairly by the necessities of the other party, he cannot be blamed for having recourse to the ordinary expedients, to avoid the penalties of an absurd law, and accomplish a fair transaction dictated by mutual expediency.

We do not find the exact date of George Bannatyne's marriage, but it may have taken place about 1587, the term of his entering the community of guild-brothers. His spouse was Isobel Mawchan, relict of Bailie William Nisbett, whom he has celebrated as a "godly, honest, wife, virtuous, and true matron." Of her beauty he says nothing, either because there was no room for speaking of such vanities, or because they would rank ill among the moral attributes with which his sober prose has invested her. If the worthy relict of Bailie William Nisbett was the lady of his love when, "in the time of his youth," he collected the works of the learned Makers of his day, and added to them his own effusions, our patriarch had made up beforehand the omifions of graver eulogium, by telling us, that as the pale moon to the bright eye of day,

My lady fo in beauty dois abound,
Above all other ladeis on the ground.

The earlieft mention of their family is the birth of a daughter, Janet Bannatyne, born on the third of May, 1587, who furvived her parents; a fon, born fixth September, 1589, named James, died in childhood. From these circumftances, it may perhaps be inferred, that George Bannatyne's marriage took place about 1586.

It is certain that the fubject of this imperfect Memoir, on the firft January, in the year of God 1583, loft his father, James Bannatyne, of the Kirktown of Newtyld, at the age of feventy-one years, leaving behind him, in life, fix fons and three daughters, all well and fufficiently provided by him, under God. "He was a man honourable, wife, and of an upright confcience," fo proceeds the pious memorial of his fon; "of all men well beloved, and to no man hurtful or wrongeous, and ended his life by praifing God with a penitent heart, and an affured hope of his mercy, through Chrift." He was fucceeded in his eftate of New Tyle by his eldeft living fon, Thomas, who became one of the Lords of Seffion by that designation, an appointment which forms an additional voucher for the general respectability of the family.

In 1591, the aforesaid Master Thomas Bannatyne, Lord New Tyle, brother of George, and one of the Lords of the College of Justice, died, at the age of fifty-one years, leaving a numerous family. In 1597 he was followed by James Bannatyne, another of George's brothers, who pursued his father's profession of a writer. The same record of mortality announces, that on the 29th January, 1597, our compiler lost his only son, James Bannatyne, a boy of between eight and nine years old; and that on the 27th of August, 1603, he was deprived of his affectionate helpmate, Isobel Mawchan, at the age of fifty-seven. Her death is affectionately recorded by her husband. "She lived," says his memorandum, "a godly, honourable, and virtuous life, all her days; was a wife, honest, and true matron, and departed in the Lord in a peaceful and godly manner."

The remaining stay of our compiler's old age was his daughter, and only surviving child, Jonet or Janet Bannatyne. This young lady was married, on the 1st of June, 1603, to George Foulis of Woodhall and Ravelstone, second son of James Foulis of Colingtoun. It appears that, after his wife's death, George Bannatyne resided in family with his daughter. He mentions in his Memoranda, that in 1606 he was dwelling with his son-in-law and daughter in Dreghorn, near Colingtoun, when a nurse in the family caught the pestilence which was then raging. She died on the 26th day of August in that year after two days' illness. But this alarming visitation made no farther progress, for which our author devoutly expresses the gratitude due to Heaven. George Bannatyne was at this time sixty-one years old; how much longer he continued to live we have not found means to ascertain, nor do we know by what summons he was finally removed from the scene.¹ But we have no reason to doubt that the end of his life corresponded with its tenor, and that his death was peaceful and timely.

This string of dates is all we have to record of our Patron's life.² But it is proper to take some notice of the work to which he owes his celebrity, and for which we acknowledge our gratitude to his memory.

It is seldom that the toils of the amanuensis are in themselves interesting, or that even while enjoying the advantages of the poor scribe's labour, we are disposed to allow him the merit of more than mere mechanical drudgery. But in the compilation of George Bannatyne's Manuscript there are particulars which rivet our attention on the writer, and raise him from an humble copyist into a national benefactor.

Bannatyne's Manuscript is in a folio form, containing upwards of eight hundred pages, very neatly and closely written, and designed, as has been supposed, to be sent to the press. The labour of compiling so rich a collection was undertaken by the author during the time of pestilence in the year 1568,³ when the dread of infection compelled men to forfake their usual employments, which could not be conducted without admitting the ordinary promiscuous intercourse between man and his kindred men.

² Our knowledge of these dates is chiefly derived from "The Tymes of the Nativities," &c., contained in the Extracts from Bannatyne's "Memoriall Buik" which follow this Memoir.

³ Upon the aucht day of September [1568], ane callit James Dalgleische, merchant, brocht in the pest in Edinburgh.—MS. Chronicle, in the possession of Sir John Maxwell of Pollock.

In this dreadful period, when hundreds, finding themselves surrounded by danger and death, renounced all care save that of selfish precautions for their safety, and all thoughts save apprehensions of infection, George Bannatyne had the courageous energy to form and execute the plan of saving the literature of a whole nation; and, undisturbed by the universal mourning for the dead, and general fears of the living, to devote himself to the task of collecting and recording the triumphs of human genius;—thus, amid the wreck of all that was mortal, employing himself in preserving the lays by which immortality is at once given to others, and obtained for the writer himself. His task, he informs us, had its difficulties; for he complains that he had, even in his time, to contend with the disadvantage of copies old, maimed, and mutilated, and which long before our day must, but for this faithful transcriber, have perished entirely. The very labour of procuring the originals of the works which he transcribed must have been attended with much trouble and some risk, at a time when all the usual intercourse of life was suspended, and when we can conceive that even so simple a circumstance as the borrowing or lending a book of ballads, was accompanied with some doubt and apprehension, and that probably the suspected volume was subjected to fumigation, and the precautions practised in quarantine.

As therefore, from the contents of the work in general, we may conclude our Patron to have been both a good judge and an energetic admirer of literature, we will not perhaps be too fanciful in deeming him a man of calm courage and undaunted perseverance, since he could achieve so heavy a labour at so inauspicious a period.

In endeavouring to form an estimate of his character, we naturally look to his literary efforts. That which we love we usually strive to imitate; and we are not surprised to find that George Bannatyne, the preserver of so many valuable poems, was himself acquainted with the art of poetry. Amid the various examples which he has compiled of the talents of others, he has obliged the reader with two poems of his own. They are ballads "tuned to his mistress's eye-brow;" but even we, his children, cannot claim for them a high rank amongst the productions of the Scottish Muse, for the power of loving and admiring with discrimination the poetry of others is very far from implying the higher faculties necessary to produce it. The reader will, however, find these two specimens of our father George's amatory poetry in the Appendix, No. IV.,¹ and may probably be of opinion that our Patron showed himself merciful in the sparing and moderate example which they afford of his poetical powers. The verses are a string of extravagant conceits, setting forth his lady's beauties and his own despair in a tone of frigid extravagance, which must have astonished Isobel Mawchan, if to her they were addressed. We are somewhat startled to hear that the lady's locks altogether resembled a bush burning in red flames, but without smoke; and scarce less so at finding our Patriarch demanding for himself as dead, an instant and hasty funeral, "because Actæon had been slain by his own fell dogs;" since the position that George Bannatyne should be forthwith buried, because Actæon was dead, seems to approach to what the learned Partridge calls a non sequitur. Actæon, we suppose, brought Adonis into our Patron's head, for we find him next remonstrating with the boar for not slaying him, and calling as loudly for death as he had done for burial in the preceding stanza.

Oh, thundering Boar, in thy most awful rage,
Why wilt thou not me with thy tusks rive?

But our Members will probably themselves apprehend an invasion of the thundering Boar, if we proceed any farther in this subject. Our respect is not paid to George Bannatyne as a poet, but as a friend and lover of poetry, and one to whom the Scottish Muses are eternally indebted, whether we consider his industry, or the taste by which it was directed.

In the reign of James IV. and V. the fine arts, as they awakened in other countries, made some progress in Scotland also. Architecture and music were encouraged by both those accomplished sovereigns; and poetry, above all, seems to have been highly valued at the Scottish court. The King of Scotland, who, in point of power, seems to have been little more than the first baron of his kingdom, held a free and merry court, in which poetry and satire seem to have had unlimited range, even where their shafts glanced on royalty itself. The consequence of this general encouragement was the production of much poetry of various kinds, and concerning various persons, which the narrow exertions of the Scottish press could not convey to the public, or which, if printed at all, existed only in limited editions, which soon sunk to the rarity of manuscripts.

There was, therefore, an ample mine out of which Bannatyne made his compilation, with the intent, doubtless, of putting the Lays of the Makers out of the reach of oblivion, by subjecting the collection to the prefs. But the bloody wars of Queen Mary's time made that no period for literary adventure; and the tendency of the subsequent age to polemical discussion discouraged lighter and gayer studies. There is, therefore, little doubt that, had Bannatyne lived later than he did, or had he been a man of less taste in selecting his materials, a great proportion of the poetry contained in his volume must have been lost to posterity; and if the stock of northern literature had been diminished only by the loss of such of Dunbar's pieces as Bannatyne's Manuscript contains, the damage to posterity would have been infinite.

This darling of the Scottish Muses has been justly raised to a level with Chaucer by every judge of poetry, to whom his obsolete language has not rendered him unintelligible. In brilliancy of fancy, in force of description, in the power of conveying moral precepts with terseness, and marking lessons of life with conciseness and energy, in quickness of satire, and in poignancy of humour, the Northern Maker may boldly aspire to rival the Bard of Woodstock. In the pathetic, Dunbar is Chaucer's inferior, and accordingly in most of his pieces he rather wishes to instruct the understanding, or to amuse the fancy, than to affect the heart. It is with pleasure we understand that an edition of the excellent poet, unrivalled by any which Scotland ever produced, is soon to appear under the auspices of our Secretary.¹

We shall then be in possession of what a correct text can give. But where is the Dryden to be found who is to translate, for the benefit of more modern times, the wisdom, the wit, the humour, which can now only be comprehended by the scholar and antiquary?

But although Dunbar be in himself a host, it is not for his pieces only that we are called to thank our Patron. The beautiful pastoral of Robin and Makyne, the works of Lyndefay, Scott, Henryson, and other poets of the sixteenth century, have been also preserved by the care of George Bannatyne, who, if he had merely acted under the impatience arising from want of employment, would perhaps have gone no farther for subjects of transcription than the "drafty rhimings," which gave so much displeasure to honest Harry Bailly, mine Host of the Tabard. But he aspired at collecting and preserving that which was really worthy of preservation, and his Manuscript must be considered as comprehending a copious selection of the best Scottish poetry. The Manuscript, therefore, which bears his name, eminently deserving of our veneration as a monument of ancient times, a record of early literature and of ancient manners, is yet more worthy of respect, from the genius and talent displayed by most of the authors whose works Bannatyne has transcribed and preserved. There is yet another point of view in which the collection may be regarded. Independent of the intrinsic merit of the poems collected in Bannatyne's manuscript, the insight which they afford respecting the manners of Scotland at that early period, is as valuable to the historian and antiquary, as their poetical merit renders them acceptable to readers of taste and judgment.

At the beginning of the Manuscript is the following Address by Bannatyne, detailing the general nature of the contents of the five parts or divisions under which the poems are classed:—

THE WRYTTAR TO THE REIDARIS.¹

Ye reverend redaris, thir workis revolving richt,
 Gif ye get crymis, correct thame to your micht,
 And curfe na clark that cunnyngly thame wrait,
 Bot blame me baldly brocht this buik till licht

 4. The ferd of lue, and thair richt reformatioun;
 5. The fyift ar tailis and storeis weill discydit:
- Reid as ye pleifs, I neid no moir narratioun.

After the introductory verses is the following title—

“Ane most godlie, mirrie, and lustie rapsodie, of his youth.”

The First part, “contenand ballattis of theologic,” extends to folio 43.—“Followis the Secound pairt of this buk, conteneand verry singular ballatis, full of wifdome and moralitie, etc.”—At folio 97 ends the Second part, and “Heir begynnys the Thrid pairt of this buik, contenand ballettis mirry, and vther solatius confaittis, set furth be diuers ancient Poyettis. 1568." These "mirry and solatius confaittis," include Christ's Kirk on the Grene, The Wyfe of Auchtermuchty, The Flyting of Dunbar and Kennedy, and many other pieces of broad humour, made, as Bannatyne expresses it, "for our consollatioun." The most conspicuous place, however, in this division, is occupied with Sir David Lyndsay's well-known Play, "The Satyre of the Three Estates;" from which, on account of "the long procefs of the play," Bannatyne contented himself with transcribing detached portions, in the form of "sertane mirry Interludis thairof, verry plesand, levand the grave mater thairof, becaws the samyne abvse is weill reformat in Scotland, prayfit be God."

These "mirry" Interludes extend to folio 210; and on the next leaf, "Heir followis ballatis of luve, devydit in four partis. The first ar songis of luve; the secound ar contemptis of luve and evill wemen; the thrid ar contemptis of evill fals vicius men; and the fourt ar ballattis detesting of luve and lichery."—Bannatyne commences this Fourth part with the following appropriate address:—

To the Reidar.

Heir haif ye, luvaris, ballattis at your will,
How evir your natur directit is vntill;
Bot wald ye luve eftir my counselling,
Luve first your God aboif all vder thing;
Nixt as your self, your nichtbur beir gud will.

Among these "Ballatis of Luve," for the preservation of which we are indebted to our Patron, we may notice the love verses of Alexander Scott, who has been styled "the Scottish Anacreon."

On proceeding to folio 298, we read, " Here followis the Fyift pairt of this buik, contenyng the Fabillis of Esop, with diuerfs vthir fabillis and poetickall workis, maid and compyld be diuers lernit men, 1568."—This part of the manuscript is likewise introduced by an address from the compiler "To the Redar."

My freindis, thir storeis subsequent,
Albeid bot fabillis thay present,
Yit devyne doctowris of jugement
 Sayis thair ar hid, but dowl,
Grave materis wyis and sapient,
Vnder the workis of poyetis gent;
Thairfoir be war that thow consent
 To blame thir heir set owt.

The chief poems contained in this division are several of Henryson's fables, with his exquisite pastoral of Robin and Makyne; the ancient allegorical poem of the Howlat; the Freirs of Berwick; Dunbar's Goldin Targe, and his Thriffill and the Rois; together with the singular rhapsody of Colkelbie's Sow. On the last leaf (folio 375) is inserted this valedictory address:—

The Wryttar to the Redare.

Heir endis this buik, writtin in tyme of pest,
Quhen we fra labor was compeld to rest
In to the thre last monethis of this yeir,
Frome oure Redimaris birth, to knaw it heir,
Ane thousand is, fyve hundreth, threscoir awcht;
Off this purpois namair it neiddis be tawcht,
 Swa till conclude, God grant ws all gude end,
 And eftir deth eternall lyfe ws fend.
 Finis. 1568.

lines of all the poems contained in the manuscript, with references to the works in which they have been severally printed.

After the death of George Bannatyne, the industrious compiler, this Manuscript became the property of his grandson, George Foulis, of Ravelfston. His daughter, Jonet Bannatyne, died on the 31st of March, 1631; and her husband, George Foulis of Ravelfston,¹ (who was Master of the King's Mint), on the 28th May, 1633. They lie buried on the west side of the Grey Friars Churchyard, where a very handsome tomb was erected to their memory. The emblematical figures which adorn this monument, for the purpose of attesting the wealth and respectability of our Patron's descendants, have been much mutilated; but the centre part, as represented in the accompanying engraving, is better preserved, and highly creditable to the state of the arts at that period; and it is the more interesting, as containing portraits of George Foulis and Jonet Bannatyne.²

¹The old house of Ravelfston was built about the year 1622, and is ornamented in various parts of the building with the ciphers of George Foulis and Jonet Bannatyne intertwined, and the ceiling of the principal room is painted with considerable elegance. A view of the house, from a sketch by James Skene, Esq., is given as a vignette at the end of this Memoir. From the prominent manner in which Jonet's name is uniformly exhibited in conjunction with her husband's, we may infer that, as an heiress, she had inherited considerable wealth from her father, George Bannatyne.

²The inscription is become illegible: Monteith, however, in his "Theater of Mortality," copied it more than a century ago, and we insert it from his curious work:—

"MEMORIÆ SACRUM,

"VIRI optimi Georgii Foulis, a Ravilston, ex Nobili familia Colintonia, Rei monetariæ Regiæ Magistri, Civitatis Edinburgensæ Prætoris, ac per annos 16 Senatoris; Qui, in omni munere publico privatoque Egregia Fide et integritate; in florentis familiæ splendore et Fortunæ Amplitudine; eximia animi Modestia; bonis omnibus charus; nemini etiam improbo invisus; ad maturam

It only remains to observe that, on the 20th of November, 1712, William Foulis of Woodhall (the great-grandson of George Bannatyne¹) bestowed this Manuscript, the monument of his ancestor's taste and labours, upon the Honourable Mr. William Carmichael of Skirling, advocate. Finally, in the year 1772, the liberality of John third Earl of Hyndford made this Corpus Poetarum Scotorum public property, by depositing it in the Library of the Faculty of Advocates.

Such is all we have been able to learn of George Bannatyne, and such the general history of the compilation which he formed. It is a lesson to the Society of persons who have used his name as a rallying word to mark their attachment to Scottish literature, for it serves to show how much the patience and energy of one individual, directed by taste and good sense, was able to achieve for the preservation of the poetry of a nation within the limited space of three months.

¹ In Bannatyne's Manuscript "Memoriall Buik," a register has been kept of his grandchildren and their posterity, from which it appears that George Foulis and Jonet Bannatyne had a family of eleven sons and five daughters. The godfathers of Janet Foulis, their eldest daughter (born the 18th of April, 1604), were Mr. Thomas Craig and Henry Nisbett; and of James, their eldest son (born 15th March, 1605), were (says the writer) James Foulis of Colintoun, "my father," Sir James Foulis, "my brother," and Mr. James Bannatyne of Newtyld, one of the commissaries of Edinburgh. The godfathers of George, their second son (born 6th April, 1606), were GEORGE BANNATYNE, "my godfather," and George Heriot, elder; his godmother, Dame Beatrix Chirnfyd, spouse to Sir Lewis Craig of Wrychtis Landis, one of the Lords of Session.

Besides affording assistance to almost every antiquary who has written upon the ancient history of Scotland, "Bannatyne's Manuscript" has afforded exclusively materials for the collection by Allan Ramsay, called the Evergreen, in two little volumes, printed in the year 1724, and for a selection of ancient Scottish poetry, subsequently published by Sir David Dalrymple, Lord Hailes.

Ramsay has left traces of his labours by some lines written at the end of the Manuscript itself.¹ In his preface he praises with truth and spirit the works of the ancient Masters, to whom he had become Editor. "I have observed," he says, "that readers of the best and most exquisite discernment frequently complain of our modern writings, as filled with affected delicacies and studied refinements, which they would gladly exchange for that natural strength of thought and simplicity of style our forefathers practised; to such, I hope, the following Collection of Poems will not be displeasing.

"When these good old Bards wrote, we had not yet made use of imported trimming upon our cloaths, nor of foreign embroidery in our writings. Their Poetry is the product

¹ These lines, dated July 6, 1726, are as follows:—"On the EVER GREEN's being gathered out of this Manuscript by Allan Ramsay, who had the loan of it from the Honourable Mr. William Carmichael, advocat, brother-german to the Earl of Hynford."—

"different hue and smell are mingled together in a beautiful "irregularity."—This passage contains a deserved, and not an inelegant compliment, both to the merit of the ancient poets and the taste of George Bannatyne, who selected and arranged their compositions.

In point of editorial accuracy, Ramsay took greater license than would be now admitted. He never scrupled altering the text where he thought he could make an improvement, and very frequently he was of that opinion when it was a very mistaken one. This, however, was not the fault of honest Allan, who, as observed by Lord Hailes, was certainly a man of singular natural genius, although incompetent to editing a collection of ancient Scottish Poems, for want of the antiquarian lore essential to such a task. He had announced his intention to publish two additional volumes of the Evergreen, with lives and characters of the different Scottish poets, but the success attending his first publication was probably not sufficient to encourage him to proceed in completing the design.

The publication of Lord Hailes is entitled "Ancient Scottish Poems, published from the Manuscript of George Bannatyne. 1568. Edinburgh, 1770," 12mo. It was designed to correct the many infidelities and inaccuracies of the Evergreen, and is accompanied with notes and a glossary, valuable as coming from the pen of so celebrated an antiquary. Yet aliquando dormitat—Lord Hailes, himself the most accurate of men, after spelling the name of our patron correctly in the title-page, calls him in the first page of his preface "one Ballantine." Had he discovered this misnomer in the work while in the bookseller's hands, he would certainly have cancelled the preface. The publication is an excellent specimen of Bannatyne's Collection, though the severe delicacy of Lord Hailes's taste has excluded some curious matter.

Here, therefore, must end our brief account of our Patron, Bannatyne, his Manuscript, and the use which has been made of it. Let us conclude with the classical wish—

APPENDIX

MEMOIR AND EXTRACTS.

No. I.

NOTE, CONNECTED WITH AN ACCOUNT OF HIS OWN FAMILY, BY GEORGE BANNATYNE, whose Manuscript Collection of Scottish Poems furnished part of its materials to Ramsay's Evergreen, and a subsequent publication by Lord Hailes.

(Communicated by SIR WILLIAM MACLEOD BANNATYNE of Kaims.)

IN that account he states himself to be son of James Bannatyne of the Kirkcoun of Neutyle and Catherine Taillefer, and a younger brother of Thomas Bannatyne, who, by the death of his elder brother, Lawrence, under age, and without children, became the eldest of his sons, succeeded to him in his lands of Neutyle, and whom he states to have become a Senator of the College of Justice.

Agreeably to this statement we find, in the List of the Lords of Session published by Lord Hailes, from a Manuscript Abridgment of the Acts of Sederunt, which had belonged to Lord Pitmeddin, Mr. Thomas Ballenden's name entered as a Judge in 1577, in room of Auchinoul—and as deceased 26th November, 1591—the year in which George Bannatyne states Thomas to have died; and we find Andrew Wemyss, Myre-Cairne, named as a Judge on the decease of Newtyle—a circumstance which, with some other entries in it, shows that the writer of that Catalogue used the names of Ballenden and Bannatyne indifferently for each other; and that the Thomas Ballenden of Neutyle, who is entered as becoming a Judge in 1577, and dying in 1591, is no other than Thomas, the elder brother of George Bannatyne.

Respecting James, their father, whom George states as proprietor of the Kirkton of Neutyle, and as married to Catharine Taillefer, mother to Thomas, himself, and the other children mentioned in his account, there appear (in Mr. Thomson's Register of the Great Seal) two charters obtained by him, the one 1st June, 1548, Jacobo Bannatyne, burgensi de Edinburgh, "superioritatis terrarum de Kin-clevin," Perthshire; the other, 23d March, 1558, "Jacobo Bannatyne, burgensi de Edinburgh, et Catharinae Taillefer suæ sponæ terrarum de Little Balchonre, et Torwathwy," Fyfehire; which last, by mentioning Catharine Taillefer as his wife, shows this James Bannatyne, burgess of Edinburgh, to have been no other than James Bannatyne of the Kirkton of Neutyle, father to Thomas, Lord Neutyle, and to George himself.

There appear, also, in the Register of the Great Seal, 1527, a charter to John Bannatyne, designed Scribo signeti; and another, 1540, to James Bannatyne, also designed Scribo signeti, of certain tenements in Edinburgh, though it is not known whether either of these persons were connected with, or of the same family with, James Bannatyne of the Kirkton of Neutyle, and his sons George and Thomas.

However that may be, Thomas Bannatyne, Lord Neutyle, and brother of George, had a son carrying the same name with his grandfather, James Bannatyne of the Kirkton of Neutyle, burgess of Edinburgh, as appears from the Retour, No. 1073, vol. ii., of Thomson's Inquis. Retorn. Abbreviatio, dated 24th May, 1596, Perthshire; being that of "Magister Jacobus Bannatyne, Hæres Magistri Thomæ Bannatyne de Neutyle, unius Senatorum Collegii Justitiæ, patris, in Molendino de Migell, cum terris Molendinariis et afstrictis multuris."

Among the writings of the Bannatynes of Camys, who, as did also the Bannatynes of Corehouse, originally spelt their names Bannachtyne, there is a charter by James Bannatyne, designing himself son of Alexander Bannatyne, burgess of Edinburgh, conveying to Hector Bannatyne, Elder of Camys, in liferent, and Ninian, Younger of Camys, his son, in fee, the lands of Camys, and others in the Isle of Bute; as also those of Bannatyne Yards, in Ayrshire, as standing in his person by an apprising, apparently in trust for a particular purpose, appearing from other parts of the family writings; and by which they are destined, failing heirs of Ninian, successively to Angus, Ronald, and Charles, the brothers of Hector; and failing them, to James Bannatyne the granter—a circumstance which points him out, at the date of that charter, 31st July, 1577, to have been the nearest male relation of the family failing Hector, his son, and brothers; and makes it probable, that his father Alexander, designed burgess of Edinburgh, was himself an immediate son, or perhaps a grandson of the family; as, in a Crown-charter, 20th December, 1475, of their lands in Bute, Ayr, and Argyleshire, Robert, the grandfather of Hector, therein designed Robert de Bannatyne, appears to have had two brothers, Alexander the elder, and Walter the youngest, of the first of whom, Alexander, burgess of Edinburgh, if not an immediate son of the family, might be a descendant; and as among the witnesses to the first mentioned charter of James, the son of Alexander, burgess of Edinburgh, it is observable that we find, along with Alexander Bannatyne of Scarrol, proprietor of the lands of that name in Bute, and a well-known descendant of the Kames family, James Bannatyne of Kirkcoun, evidently the father of George and Thomas, Lord Neutyle, that circumstance, with the appearance of George having carried their armorial bearing, as delineated on the manuscript of his Poems, seemed to make it highly probable, that James Bannatyne of Kirkton, or his sons, were nearly connected with Alexander Bannatyne, also a burgess of Edinburgh, and his son James, and all of them equally descended from the Kames family.

It would seem, however, that there now appears some uncertainty as to what was the armorial bearings of George; either that the marking on the manuscript of his poems¹ has been misunderstood, or that he himself had erroneously marked it as three mullets and a bend, being the armorial bearing of Kames; as, on the manuscript containing the account of his father's family, it is marked as a cross fable in a field argent between four mullets, the armorial bearing of the Bannatynes of Corehouse and Newhall; a circumstance which rather points at George and his brother Thomas being cadets of the Bannatynes of Corehouse; of which it can be clearly shown that the Auchinoul family, afterwards Lord Ballenden, though chusing to assume a different armorial bearing, and a different mode of spelling their name, were also descendants.

However this might be, as it has been seen that an intercourse, marking the probability of a connexion with each other, took place between James Bannatyne of Kirkton, the father of George and Thomas Lord Neutyle, and James, the son of Alexander Burgess of Edinburgh, and a near descendant of the Bannatynes of Camys or Kames; so this last would appear to have maintained a similar degree of intercourse with the Ballendens of Auchinoul—for a dispute which had arisen between Hector Bannatyne of Kames, and his brother Charles Bannatyne of Crafflagloan, being by a submission, 17th January, 1592, referred to the above-mentioned James Bannatyne, therein designed writer, and Mr. Patrick Bannatyne, his brother, Mr. Thomas Ballenden, designed brother-german to Sir Lewis Ballenden of Auchinoul, is named as overfman; and in the decreet-arbital which followed upon it, 8th February, 1592, we find among the witnesses Mr. Adam Ballenden, also brother to Sir Lewis.

It may be further observed, that while as both the families of Camys and Corehouse originally spelled their name Ban, or Benachtyne, and afterwards Bannatyne; in the first of which forms (as to the family of Kames) it frequently occurs in their early writings, and so (as to that of Corehouse) it appears in the Rolls of David the Second [Thomson's Reg. Magni Sig. p. 28, art. 47]; both wore mullets in their arms, and both carried the same crest and motto; circumstances which leave no doubt as to their being of the same descent.

The Camys or Kames family derive their descent from Gilbert, the son of Gilbert, who, under the designation of Gilbertus filius Gilberti, obtained a charter of part of the family lands in the island of Bute, from Walter, Steward of Scotland, witnessed by Robertus Illustrissimus Rex Scotiæ; Edwardus, Dominus Gallovidiæ, frater ejus, and several of the most distinguished barons of that period; and whose son John, who also obtained a charter from him of several other parts of the family lands, appears from entries in the Chamberlain Rolls, and other evidence, to have been chamberlain of Bute under the Steward.

They had many branches in Bute and its neighbourhood, including the Bannatynes of Kelly in Renfrew and Ayr-shires, and the Ballantines, now of Castlehill, in the latter.

They had been always considered as a head family; and their title to be so was strongly pointed out by the circumstance, that while all the Bannatynes of Bute carried the Gaelic patronymic of M'Amyne, derived from an older ancestor than either of the Gilberts, the family of Kames, as their head, carried that of M'Amyne Mher; circumstances which, joined to the others already noticed, and particularly of their both having originally borne the name of Bannachtyne, evidently one of Gaelic origin, much more likely to be assumed by a family in Bute, where that language prevailed, than by one in Lanarkshire, entitle its present representative to hold that the Kames family was the general root of the name, and that of Corehouse one of its branches, though certainly not the oldest of them.

ADDITIONAL NOTICES RESPECTING GEORGE BANNATYNE AND HIS CONNEXIONS.

(Communicated by JOHN RIDDELL, Esq., Advocate.)

CONTRACTS, dated Edinburgh, 4th April, 1571, between Sir John Bellenden of Auchinoul, knight, and Jonet Leyton, his spouse, on one part, and Henry Nisbet, burghers of Edinburgh, and Janet Bannatyne, his spouse, on the other part, by which, for the sum of 500 merks, paid by Henry Nisbet and Janet Bannatyne, the latter agree to infest the former in an annual rent of 50 merks out of the lands of Nether Carlourie, Linlithgowshire, under reversions. Witnesses, Mr. Thomas Bannatyne, GEORGE and Mr. James Bannatynes, sons to James Bannatyne, burghers of Edinburgh, and James Bannatyne, younger, his servand.—[Bonds and Obligations, vol. xi.]

James Bannatyn, WRITER, burghes of Edinburgh, GEORGE and Mr. James Bannatynes, his sones, and James Bannatyne, servand to the said James, mentioned in a deed dated 1569.—[Bonds and Obligations, vol. xi.]

The above Henry Nisbet was undoubtedly the ancestor of the knightly family of Nisbet of Dean, near Edinburgh, his elder representatives, and of their cadets, the Nisbets of Craigintinnie and Dirleton. Sir John Nisbet of Dirleton, Lord Advocate to Charles the Second, is well known. These facts can be proved by legal evidence, and are mentioned by Nisbet in his Heraldry, vol. i., p. 315, new edition.

Nisbet, or rather the author of Historical and Critical Remarks on Ragman Roll, observes, "Nisbet of Dean is now the best family of the name," [ib. vol. ii. Hist. and Critical Remarks, p. 42]; and that of the Nisbets of Dalzell, of the ancient family of the Nisbets of that ilk, "flowed the Nisbets of Dean, being descended of Adam Nisbet, a son of the Barons of Dalzell, who came to Edinburgh a merchant in King James the Fourth's time, as Sir Patrick Nisbet of Dean, Bart, informed the author of these remarks."—[Ib. p. 48.] Adam was the father of Henry above mentioned.

Nisbet, author of the Heraldry, again says [article, Exterior Ornaments, vol. ii., p. 32, new edit.], "that the family of Dean is the only family of the name in Scotland that has right, by consent, to represent the old original family of the name of Nisbet: since the only lineal male representer, the author of this System, is like to go soon off the world, being an old man, and without issue, male or female. On which account he had a right," he adds, "to the ancient supporters of Nisbets of that ilk, which he had, indeed, previously borne by authority." It is to be observed that Nisbet, author of the Heraldry, was the undoubted chief of the name.

ANE Lettir, maid with awife and consent of the Lordis of our Soverane Lordis Secreit Counsell, makand, constituand and ordinand his lovittis servitouris JAMES BANNATYNE, of the Kirktooun of Newtyle, Tabular of the College of Justice, and Maister Thomas Bannatyne, his sone and apperand air, and the langest levar of thame twa, ather of thame broukand eftir utheris as thai ar ordanit be thir lettiris, Tabularis of his Hienes Senate and College of Justice, of all and fundrie summondis to be callit thairin, be ordour of tabill, for all the dayis of thair lyffis, &c., &c. AN ACCOUNT OF THE CONTENTS

THE Manuscript Collection of Poems, written by GEORGE BANNATYNE, in the year 1568, is, as stated in the preceding Memoir by Sir Walter Scott, a folio volume† containing upwards of 800 pages, 404 folios. That it was compiled or written at or about the same period is evident from a careful examination, although a few short poems which belong to the end of the 16th, or early part of the 17th century, have been inserted on some blank leaves of the volume, while two at least date from the beginning of the 18th century. These interpolations have been pointed out at the places where they occur in the Manuscript, and have been printed by themselves in an Appendix at the end of the work. [See pages 1077 et seqq.] They are also noted in the following List of Contents.

The care bestowed by Bannatyne in making so extensive a collection of the remains of our early Makers, and his occasional addresses to the reader, seem to denote that it was intended for publication. We cannot, however, claim for him the merit of being the only or even the earliest collector; and it is worthy of remark, that Sir Richard Maitland of Lethington, when advanced age had rendered him incapable of taking any active part in public affairs, should have amused himself about the same time in a similar occupation; and indeed the task of collecting our popular literature may have been attempted by other individuals, although the result of their labours has been less fortunate.

* This "Account of the Contents of the Bannatyne Manuscript" was written for the "Memorials of George Bannatyne, 1545-1608," which, edited by Dr. David Laing, was printed for the members of the Bannatyne Club, Edin., 1829. A number of necessary alterations and additions have now been made. [Ed., 1883.]

The earliest known collection of miscellaneous Scottish poetry worthy of notice, is a volume, in the Auchinleck Library, written by JOHN ASLOAN about the year 1515; but, unfortunately, only a portion of the original volume has been preserved. In this portion, however, we find "The Buke of the Chefs," Henryson's "Orpheus and Eurydice," "The Buke of the Howlat" by Holland, "The Buke of the Sevin Sages," and a fragment of "The Preiftis of Peblis," besides some prose writings, including the valuable contemporary Chronicle of the reign of James II. of Scotland. From a table of contents at the beginning of the volume, it appears originally to have consisted of 71 articles, 36 of which have been preserved, but partially mutilated. Among the articles in the portion which is lost were the Bukes "of Ralf Coilzear," "of Sir Golagrus, and Sir Gawane," and "of Colkelby"; with "Mr. Robert Henderson's Doune on fut by Forth," and his "Fablis of Esope"; "The Buke of Curtafy and of Nurtur," "The Document of Sir Gilbert Hay"; and various other interesting "bukes" and "ballatis."

The Manuscript of Sir RICHARD MAITLAND is confessedly one of great importance, without admitting with Pinkerton that it is "the chief treasure of ancient Scottish poetry;" and it is matter of regret that it should not have been deposited in a place easier of access for literary purposes than the Pepysian Library, in Magdalene College, Cambridge. It is a small folio of 366 pages, and contains 176 articles, enumerated by Mr. Pinkerton in his two volumes of Ancient Scottish Poetry selected from the Manuscript* in the year 1786. A very considerable number of the poems (about one-third) are common to both collections; those of most value, peculiar to the Cambridge Manuscript, being "Peblis to the Play;" "King Hart," by Bishop Douglas; Dunbar's Tale of the "Twa Married Women and the Widow;" "The Murning Maiden;" and the original Poems by the venerable Collector himself, which are included in the publication referred to.

Another Manuscript which may be here noticed is one less known, and of less extent in consequence of many leaves having been torn out of the middle of the volume. It is deposited with Bishop More's MSS. in the University Library, Cambridge, and was written by one JOHN RIDPATH, in the year 1623; and is chiefly valuable as containing several poems by Dunbar, not elsewhere preserved; but in other respects it might be considered as a transcript of part of Sir Richard Maitland's Manuscript.

As "Mr. Dunbar," and several other of our old poets, are under great obligations to Allan Ramsay, who was the first to recommend them to public notice, we shall here insert some lines by him, which are not included in any edition of his works. They were intended to have been prefixed to the Evergreen, and are worthy of preservation, not so much in regard to any merit which they possess, but as expressing his sentiments respecting the merits of some of our early Makers:—

* Ancient Scottish Poems, 2 vols., small 8vo, Lon., 1786, Appendix, pp. 437-467.—There is also a 4to MS. dated 1585, in the hand-writing of Mary Maitland, daughter of Sir Richard. It consists of 96 pieces, chiefly transcripts from the folio MS. of Sir R. Maitland's own poems, and of others by contemporary poets during the latter half of the 16th century.—[Laing, 1829.]

SOME FEW OF THE CONTENTS.*

HEIR mighty JAMES the First, the best of Kings,
 Employs the merry Muse, and smyling sings.
 Grave BALANTYNE, in verse divinely wyfe,
 Makis Vertew triumph owre fals fleechand Vyfe.

And heir DUNBAR does with unbound ingyne,
 In satyre, joke, and in the serious schyne.
 He to best poets skairlie zields in ocht ;
 In language he may fail, but not in thocht.

Blyth KENNEDIE, contefting for the bays,
 Attackis his freind DUNBAR in comick layis,
 And seims the fitteft hand (of ony then)
 Against fae fell a fae to draw his pen.

Heir LETHINGTON the Statifman courts the Nyne,
 Draps politicks a quhyle, and turns divyne ;
 Sings the Creation, and fair Eden tint,
 And promife made to man, man durft not hint.

To rouse couragious fyre behald the field,
 Quhair Hardyknute, with lanfs, bow, sword and fcheild,
 With his braif Sonis, dantit the King of Norfs,
 And cleithed the plain with mony a faules cors.
 At Harlaw and Redfsquire, the fonis may leir,
 How thair forbeirs were unacquaint with feir.

Quhen frae the dumps ze wald zour mind difcharge,
 Then tak the air in fmiling SEMPLIS Berge :
 Or heir him jyb the carlis did Griffy blame,
 Quhen eild and fpyte takis place of zouthheids Flame.

Licht skirtit lassies, and the girnand wyfe,
 FLEMING and SCOT haif painted to the lyfe.
 SCOT, sweit tungd SCOT, quha sings the Welcum hame
 To MARY, our maist bony Soverane Dame ;
 How lyflie he and amorous STUART sing !
 Quhen lufe and bewtie bid them spred the wing.

To mend zour morals, with delyt attend,
 Quhyle HENRYSON dois guidnefs recommend ;
 Quhyle Truth throw his transport Fabis schynes,
 And all the mynd to quhat is just inclynes.

Amangst these starnis of ane immortal bleis,
 MONTGOMERY's quatorfimes fall evir pleis ;
 His eify sangs, his Cherry and the Slae,
 Sall be esteimd quhyle sichs fast lufe betray.

LINDSAY the Lyon, hardly here is sene,
 But in the third Apartment of the Grene,*
 He fall appeir as on the verdant Stage ;
 He towind the vyces of a corrupt aige.

Thair Warkis I've publisht, neat, correct, and fair,
 Frae antique manuscriptis, with utmost cair.
 Thus to their fame, a monument we raise,
 Quhilk fall endure quhyle Tymis telld out be days.

The first page of the Bannatyne Manuscript bears the title—"Heir begynniss ane ballat buik writtin in the yeir of God 1568," and beneath "Ex Libris Bibliothecae Facultatis Juridicae, Edinburgi, 1772." Page 2 is blank, and on the 3rd begins "Quhen goldin Phebus movit fra the Ram," the first of the duplicate pages which, up to the 54th, seem to be a first attempt of the writer towards the compilation. All the pieces in these pages have been re-written in the body of the Manuscript, but with slight variations and in a different order. Pages 55 to 58 contain "The Song of the Rid Square," not afterwards repeated, and evidently written at a much later date. It, as an interpolated piece, is given in full at page 1097 of the Hunterian Club edition. For the sake of convenience in the following list of contents this portion of the Manuscript is referred to as "Duplicate pages," and the pieces are numbered after those in the Manuscript itself.

The Manuscript proper begins with an unnumbered leaf, at the head of which is written "Edin, Nov. 20th, 1712. This book is gifted to Mr. WILLIAM CARMICHAELL be me WILL. FOULIS."

On the same page are two introductory stanzas by George Bannatyne, the second describing the five orders under which the poems contained in the Manuscript are classed. They are entitled "The Wryttar to the Reidaris," and begin

"Ye reverend redaris, thir workis revolving richt."

2 nine-line stanzas, 18 lines.

The reverse of the leaf contains some anonymous lines entitled "God," and beginning,

"God is a substance for evir durable."

7 lines.

* The pages given are those of the Hunterian Club edition.

At the top of folio 1 to the left is the following title :—

ANE MOST GODLIE MIRRIE AND LUSTIE RAPSODIE MAIDE BE SUNDRIE LEARNED SCOTS POETS AND WRITTEN BE GEORGE BANNATYNE IN THE TYME OF HIS YOUTH.*

The various poems follow as under in succession :—

1. "Heir begynnys the richt excellent, godly and lernit Werk

"He plasmatour of thingis uniuerfall."

9^a 21

35 five-line stanzas, 175 lines.

"Finis quod Mr. Gawyne Dowglas."

Douglas, 1553. Do., 1710, 308.

* Not in George Bannatyne's writing, but probably in that of Bishop Percy.

† The folios referred to are those of the Bannatyne Manuscript.

THE BANNATYNE MANUSCRIPT.

NAMES OF THE AUTHORS.

The following list of authors' names has been compiled from the Bannatyne Manuscript in the first instance, and supplemented from other sources, principally the various works which have been more or less indebted to its folios. The authorities for these additions are mentioned in the accompanying Notes, which also state the instances where pieces have been attributed to other authors than those named by George Bannatyne.

A list of the pieces left anonymous in the Manuscript has also been given.

The larger figures after the names of authors refer to the pages of the Hunterian Club edition of the Manuscript, and the smaller ones to the appended Notes (page cxlii.).—Ed.

19. Auct. the Maitland Manuscript.
20. In part by Dunbar, auct. Dr. David Laing.
21. "The Table of the Haill Buik," by George Bannatyne, was largely added to by Bishop Percy, auct. Dr. David Laing. See Note, page 1058.
22. Attributed to "Chaufeir" in the Manuscript.
23. The name of George Bannatyne as author is embodied in lines 69-70 of this piece.
24. "The Table" was written by George Bannatyne. See No. 21.
25. The fifth Epigram is taken from the "Remedie of Luve," Chaucer's Works, 1561.
26. The end of this piece has not been given in the Manuscript. On p. 281 another copy is attributed to Dunbar.
27. The pseudonym of "Ane Ingilfman" is given in the Manuscript.
28. As the manuscript is here imperfect, the end of this piece and the author's name are wanting.

PREFATORY NOTE.

THOUGH more than a century and a half ago the Bannatyne Manuscript was stated to be "the most ample and valuable collection of Scottish Poetry that is now extant," though it supplied the materials for Allan Ramsay's "Evergreen" in 1724, and though selections from its folios are to be found in almost every subsequent collection of national poetry, it had never been rendered completely accessible to students of early Scottish literature until it was transcribed literally and printed in full by the Hunterian Club of Glasgow.

When, as editor of the work almost from the outset, I undertook at the request of the Council to prepare a Glossary to accompany the print of the Manuscript issued by the Club, I had not fully realised the probable extent of such a compilation, nor the formidable amount of time and labour which its preparation would involve. As the printing of the Manuscript progressed these difficulties became more and more apparent, and the burden of the work generally, accompanied by my want of health, and various matters connected with the management of the Club over which I had no control, more than once almost led me to abandon the partly completed task.

Such faint-hearted thoughts did not, however, ultimately prevail, and by putting "a stout heart to a stey brae" the work has now at last been definitely brought to a conclusion. I am, therefore, not without hope that the following pages will prove my best apology for whatever may have been my share of the delay in their issue, a delay which undoubtedly must have seriously taxed the patience and forbearance of the members of the Hunterian Club.

In the revision of the word-flips and in the correction of the proof-sheets of the Glossary I have had the continued help of Mr. David Donaldson, F.E.I.S., the well-known editor of Jamieson's "Scottish Dictionary," and author of its indispensable "Supplement" of 1889, and I take this opportunity of warmly acknowledging his invaluable services to me both in advice and in direct work.

In the case of every doubtful word reference has been made to the Bannatyne Manuscript itself at the Advocates' Library in Edinburgh, and I have to thank Mr. James T. Clark, Keeper of that institution, not only for affording me at all times the needful access to the Manuscript, but for his freely rendered and prompt assistance on occasions when I could not personally be present.

The plan and order which have been followed in the compilation and arrangement of this Glossary may be now briefly stated.

In the definition of words a severe repression has been exercised, as considerations of space forbade any latitude in that direction; and for the same reason quotations of phrases have been much curtailed.

Derivations from Old French only have been given, but these have been quoted to an extent sufficient to show, if proof were otherwise wanting, how extensively that language had entered into the vernacular in Scotland during the 15th and 16th centuries.

The first occurrence of a word in the Manuscript is generally the one which has been quoted. It is probable, however, that some of the definitions may be found to be more applicable to subsequent uses of the same word, although in such instances it has not been possible to give the additional references.

The figures in every case refer to the page and line of the Hunterian Club text where each quoted word may be found, and they are followed by the author's name given in an abbreviated form. A list of names of authors, real or assumed, is appended.

A considerable number of cross references have been introduced, with an occasional quotation from Jamieson where his mode of spelling a word colourably differs from its form in the Manuscript.

Where phrases are inserted they usually follow the particular word on account of which they have been quoted; the preceding reference as a rule therefore will be found to apply to them.

The very few words which it was found impossible to define, or to which only a conjectural gloss could be given, are followed by a mark of interrogation.

For reasons of alphabetical arrangement a compound word or a phrase has sometimes been inverted; but in all such instances the actual first word of the quotation has been printed with a capital.

In the course of the extensive and continuous revision of the text, necessitated by the preparation of the Glossary, some words omitted from the latter, and occasional errors either in the Bannatyne Manuscript itself, or in the Hunterian Club print, have been noted, and these have been pointed out respectively in the Glossary or in the concluding Addendum.

THE BANNATYNE MANUSCRIPT.

FACSIMILES.

PREFATORY NOTE.

THE following facsimiles—eleven in number—of portions of the Bannatyne Manuscript which have been selected by the editor to give as far as possible a fair representation of the penmanship and style of this famous Collection of Scottish Poetry were photographed from the originals and printed by Messrs. George Waterston & Son, of Edinburgh.

From the small space available on the demy quarto page of the Hunterian Club issues, and the large size of the written folios of the Manuscript, it was found that only portions of the selected pieces could be reproduced, except in the cases of Nos. III. and XI., which it was found possible to give in full by the use of double pages.

Nos. I. and X. give the compiler's (George Bannatyne) own introductory and concluding stanzas; No. VI. reproduces part of one of his poems, which contains a chronogram of his name; and in No. IX. will be found the concluding part of "Colkelbie Sow," beneath which is drawn a pen sketch of the Bannatyne armorial bearings.

Nos. III. and VII. are by Alexander Scott, the former a complete poem, while the latter shows that the pen of the corrector is to be found to a considerable extent in some parts of the Manuscript. No. II. is an extract from "The Benner of Pietie," by "Archedene" Bellenden; No. IV. a part of "The Curling of Sir John Rowll"; No. V. one of the numerous anonymous pieces in the collection, "O, foly Hairt, fetterit in Fantefye"; and No. VIII. a portion of "The Houlate," by Sir Richard Holland.

No. XI., "On the Ever Green's being gathered out of this Manuscript" is a piece by Allan Ramsay, which was written by the poet, presumably at the time when he is known to have had the loan of the Manuscript in the year 1726, on a page originally left blank.

The First Salme—Alexander Scott.

These follows the cursing of Sir John Rowll
 Upon the stealing of his father's

O chyne passer of mirgins maist
 of fader fens and galygus
 John gress and his apprestis
 John pauls and his desepelis
 And all ye power vnder god and was of Rome yet bours the son vnder ye son to looke and bind
 I am allunder nat we do fynd
 In yet power that power
 Gods hand makefens with his hand
 And all ye blude about your hand
 Blab be your power blab be your power
 For fybe the gifts of the fynes rowll

THE Houlate maid. bo Holland
 In the middis of may it mornis as I want I met
 A hert with markit on mold till a grene mow
 The blenis' blynd of of doot fro the sone l'ent
 That all bryght about the bordenis' or breid
 Wroth allin herbis off an. yat roar in eed l'ent
 The fildis' fearynt and fret full of f'arheid
 So soft was the s'arson s' s'owand down s'ont
 Throch ye greut. gift off his godheid
 That all was unigle other ye of an and ro'erd
 This throb ye ch'ist' so ch'ar
 above but f'ar or f'ar yat y'allie repret
 I w'ant till a w'ant

This rich ryder down can but resting or w'ant
 Throch a f'orrest on f'und yat f'arhe was f'air
 all the brayn' off that borne' b'air b'enchis a'ide
 And b'eds blyth' off b'le on b'lossomes b'air
 The l'und l'ow was and l'ow l'ow l'ow and l'ow and for to l'ide by that l'ake l'ow l'ow l'ow b'ecause that w'ir l'ertid in herbis coult h'ide
 f' vanquand and p'and b'air and b'air
 That sat I in f'ace f'arhe and f'air
 Content of ye f'are f'air
 McGle more of the m'ith yat ye g'erned b'air
 All was b'lyth off the b'ith

all to my self is the singhitude
 And I begin to sport and not conclude
 When molyge all helpe for, to my gaudie
 That sit to bond and left it in a blundie
 And hitherto I will for of my fankie
 When pleasing to gladd his compaignie
 But for gods love and his appeall petic.
 Pardoun the fulle fate of his mad metie
 For as sentence to foill is fantastie
 Let the letter and language be his lye
 For all the world change summe fairs
 I tuff I will tuff tuff upum tuff
 And so let so what land is to him most nyste
 And hitherto I will tuff tuff upum tuff
 So pat it be sport in destruction
 And out of tuff tuff tuff tuff
 phituller malygeale fuff tuff sommit
 And tuff tuff tuff tuff tuff tuff tuff
 For quibz Quibz my malygeale
 So be tuff tuff tuff tuff tuff tuff
 I pesson not as tuff tuff tuff tuff
 But sayir sport myne am tuff tuff tuff
 And my lordie to him pat will tuff
 And I begin not tuff tuff tuff tuff
